Tread lightly, you're in

toheroa territory

While you're enjoying the racing at Oreti Beach this weekend, spare a thought for the locals.

You won't see them, but there's a whole population of sensitive shellfish right under your feet. They're called toheroa and they're an important part of the coastal community on this beach.

Toheroa are a protected species because their numbers are dwindling. Oreti Beach is one of three sites in Southland where these molluscs can be found. No-one is generally allowed to disturb the toheroa in their beds without very good reason.

You might think that having motorbikes revving and racing mere centimetres over their heads would in fact upset the toheroa – and you'd be right. So each year the organisers of the Burt Munro Challenge work with local iwi and Environment Southland to identify the best place to race, away from the area where most of the toheroa live.

So please – tread lightly while you're on Oreti Beach. That way you can enjoy the action without disturbing the neighbours.

Thanks!

On behalf of the toheroa population.
